About the Seminar :

Basic structure theory is widely debatable issue. This theory is judicial Innovation which puts implied limitations on the power of parliament and legislature in the field of law making process. It mandated that Parliament and legislatures shall not make laws which violates basic structure of Indian constitution. This doctrine has given birth by Supreme Court in landmark Kesvanand Bharati Judgement in the year 1973. Parliament and Legislatures in our country, are directly elected representative bodies of people. Our Preamble of Constitution also mandated supremacy of the people.

In view of above, in a Parliamentary democratic country like India whether we have a need of basic structure theory which puts limitation on the power of legislative bodies and give plenary power to the parliament in the field of Legislature, is debatable.
